ALTERNATIVE TYPES OF FLOUR

FLAXSEED FLOUR. Magnesium and zinc contained in the flour support the nervous and immune systems. It is a source of Omega fatty acids that help improve skin and hair, prevent premature aging.

BUCKWHEAT FLOUR. Rich in phosphorus and magnesium, it reduces the risk of bony rarefaction and maintains bone density. Buckwheat is the source of vegetable protein and vitamin B3, which contribute largely to metabolism, help reduce fat and stay fit.

RICE FLOUR. The flour is rich in selenium, which provides unique immune boosting and rejuvenating properties. Rice flour is recommended to those who want to reduce gluten consumption.

SPELT FLOUR. Thanks to kernel particles the flour contains fiber, vitamins and minerals. It contributes to better digestion and supports nervous system.

RYE FLOUR is produced from selected grain grown in ecologically friendly regions of Russia. It has a dark creamy color and irregular texture, consisting of small and large grain particles, visible remnants of grain turnover. It is the most useful type of flour, as it is made using whole grains with their hulls. Rye flour is used to bake traditional and specialty breads, lean cakes and pies, and to make pancakes, flatbreads, and cookies. The flour must be sieved to obtain a homogeneous, fluffy dough.
